Done, though with several URL cleanups:
- Replaced spaces with %20
- Replaced smart single quotes with regular ASCII single quotes.
- Four ended up escaped in the DB due to some fancy dashes.

Hi there, is the list above the reason that e-catworld.com just got de-ranked from google's engine?

I've been searching for the reason that e-catworld.com was recently reported to be taken off Google and it led me to this bug. I noticed that e-catworld.com is in the list with false subdomains. the false domain url has since been taken down. I suspect that this is an SEO attack in which a group of people are exploiting overly broad pattern matching to the las vegas shooting to take down target websites.

This site reports on the scientific advancement of low-energy-nuclear reactions. They do not report on current events.

I'm opening the bug back up to get the bug on the radar. I'm not sure if this is the preferred protocol, so my apologies in advance if this causes an inconvenience.

I want to mention that the timeline of this bug and the take down is fairly consistent. this bug was fixed on Oct 2nd 2017, and the website at e-catworld.com reported that they have been delisted on Google on Nov. 15th by one of their readers.

At the time of this writing, e-catworld.org has been created as an alternative by the site owner and google is currently indexing that just fine.

Hi Zachary,

No, this is completely unrelated.

Edit This is completely unrelated as far as I am aware. This was a simple url takedown request.

Thanks,
Rob

Rob is correct, changes to ad serving and changes to search ranking are done completely independently, and by different teams.
